Research has argued that art therapy employs “active, mind-body strategies” (Holt & Kaiser, 2009: 250) that fit well with the principles of MI/MET (Holt & Kaiser, 2009). Specifically, art therapy complements the MI/MET framework, as it utilizes the same cognitive processes of valuing, choosing, and deciding (Horay, 2006).

Although the science of translating research into practice is fairly new, there is some guiding evidence of what implementation interventions to use in
